

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

easier than to double our circulation within thirty days, if the present subscribers would but do what, under the circumstances, it seems proper to expect of them. The difficulties in the way of firmly establishing a new paper or journal are many. These difficulties we cannot hope to overcome, unless we are accorded the hearty support of all who, with us, are interested in the success of the enterprise.

The Hebrew Student Supplement.—At the suggestion of members of "The Hebrew Correspondence School," it has been decided to issue in connection with each succeeding number of THE HEBREW STUDENT, what shall be called "The Hebrew Student Supplement." The "Supplement" is to be published in the interests of "The Hebrew Correspondence School." Its special purpose will be, (1) to furnish information concerning the members of the "School;" (2) to publish from month to month the names of those who join the "School;" (3) to give directions and instructions concerning the work of the "School;" (4) to give to members of the "School" an opportunity to communicate with each other, and to relate from time to time their "Hebrew" experience; in a word (5) to bind together the widely scattered members, and, if possible, to enable them to feel that they are class-mates—members of a class, which includes men of every age, of every theological belief, and of almost every country, a class engaged in one common work, preparation for the more thorough and perfect study of an important part of God's revelation to man. Is there not, truly, something inspiring in the thought of such a class?

The number of pages in the "Supplement" will depend upon the amount of matter furnished by the members of the "School," for it is intended that they shall for the most part, furnish the necessary material. Nothing can be inserted which is received later than the 25th of the preceding month.

A Plea for Hebrew.—The most telling plea for Hebrew study, which it has been our privilege to read, appears in The Presbyterian Witness (Nov. 11), Halifax, N. S. It is an address by the Rev. John Currie, the occupant of the chair of Hebrew in the Presbyterian College of Halifax. Professor Currie's reputation as a textual critic is recognized in England. We believe that he has not long occupied his present position. He is conservative in his views, yet broad and liberal. He has that very important element of a teacher, enthusiasm, and certainly his is no low idea of the demands of the present in this department of theology, as may be seen from the closing paragraph of his address:

"That the grand old language shall ever thus attain a second golden age, it is perhaps too much to expect; but the hope is surely well founded that in no distant future students shall enter the Theological Hall prepared at once to leave behind first principles and to go on to perfection, and that, when their term of study is completed, they shall bear testimony to their accomplishments as Hebraists by nerve in their style, grandeur in their conceptions, breadth in their views, and freshness and fullness in their Old Testament expositions."

Semitic Study in Germany.—During the coming winter-semester, the vexed questions of Old Testament Introduction will be discussed thoroughly in the German lecture rooms. Prof. Franz Delitzsch at Leipzig, Prof. Dillmann at